Recirculation of Crystal

Handmade glass is never quite the same twice.

Recirculation of Crystal is an exploration of the qualities of glass. The starting point is the organic shapes that form naturally when glass is hot, as gravity and movement leave their marks on the material.

The works follow a circular journey through the material. Glass is shaped by hand, used, broken, collected and melted again. Each process brings new possibilities, allowing the glass to take on different forms and qualities, particularly in the way it catches and transforms light.

The works invite close looking. As visitors move around them, reflections shift, revealing new details depending on the angle, the time of day and the weather. The exhibition looks at how glass can continue to change and become something new.
